Today's War Moves

By British United Press

The result of the three-day battle of Solom reveals today Britain's strength and weakness in North Africa. It shows that, definitely, Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's forces have been strong enough to have the quiet zone line drive which the Axis forces apparently had been planning against Egypt and Syria. That in a sense justifies Wavell's attack and should be a source of satisfaction to the British.

Late Summer Now Promises Crucial Events

By WILLIAM H. STONEMAN

LONDON, June 19.—(CP)—With the United States apparently halting right on the brink of war and the British Empire, in the balance, the late summer of 1941 now promises to produce the most dramatic and perhaps the most crucial events of the entire war.

Exclusive

It is now believed by the average Britisher that the United States will come into the war in the very near future and that belief has cheered up the population as nothing else that has happened since September, 1939. The average man now knows that American intervention is necessary to final victory and he feels, at the same time, that an American declaration of war would really seal the final fate.

California, and Pennsylvania, naturally can outstrip us in the storing of oil. And that no matter what the price, we must buy great quantities of fuel from this nation which has the largest oil reserves in the world.

"You cannot ignore the importance of trading with a nation that is so bountifully blessed with no natural resources," the statesman will use for a clincher.

U.S. Citizen Ready To Fight If Aroused

They are, and since neither through most of this nation east of the Mississippi River, time past three weeks, interviewing every body from car-hops to the presidents of corporations, this Richard Harding Davis of the road-maps has a much clearer picture of what this nation is really doing and thinking about the possibilities and probabilities of war.

There definitely is a common denominator to it all. There are differing local colorations. Comments come in varied dialects. There is a percentage of confusion. There are a few individual babbles. But the following general sentiments are held in common in all sections, and I don't care who cites what poll to the contrary.

This nation is not yet emotionally ready to fight, but it wouldn't take a great deal to put it there. A couple more Robin Moore, with a convincing steering comment from Berlin, would, in most cases, bring the requisite awe. The average American will fight more eagerly over a personal insult than he will over a piece of coldly schemed damage. Challenge his honor or his course, and you have him to contend with. This applies to his national honor as well.

SLUG OR IGNORE HITLER?

This nation from what I understand of it, could never be aroused to a shouting frame of mind by even a masterful rhetorical presentation of how and why a Nazi victory would jeopardize our foreign trade and our general standard of living.

President Roosevelt hasn't made the sale yet with his friends circle. They've been too generalized, too academic, too unoppressed with specific incidents.

The best you can say for that type of attention-calling, is that it has prepared the way. Most of the common folks talked with seem to believe that the nation knows more than they're telling. Some of the upper crust say he doesn't know what he's doing. But all agree we want to put off Hitler. The difference comes over whether to slug him or ignore him.

Many stated they are prepared to believe the worst of the Nazis and to make war to the hilt if Hitler or what he represents really threatens this nation's security, but before committing themselves unreservedly, they said, they'd like more definite proof. Words, they said, aren't enough—not even the President's words.

LOYAL TO DEMOCRACY

The nation is loyal, for all I could find to the contrary. I couldn't discover anybody who didn't say, with apparent sincerity, that a Democracy is the only form of government, he cares to subscribe to. Opinions about international policies differed considerably, but the overall conception of Democracy was solid.

The average American citizen is approximately the same no matter where his residence. He generally agrees to war to take place and it wouldn't amaze him much to hear of shooting any minute, probably in the Atlantic, but possibly in the far Pacific.

TED UP ON STRIKES

Hammam's likes an unavoidable necessity. He's worried about production, and he's going to stand for much more of this striking in the plants working on strike orders. This is especially true in the South, which is open shop country. Criticism of CIO defense strikes is truly withheld when that way.

When you get the composite picture, you discover it's a capable and sincere sort of citizen, loyal to his nation and its way of doing business about 70 per cent sure that, however, we got there, we're going to have an argument with each body and in about the same percentage as that the so-called Axis powers are definitely going to give them a piece of the general peace and security of both present and future.

Air Force Fighters Guard Huge Crowd Watching Race

NEWMARKET, June 10.—(AP)—Owen Tudor, a 25-1 shot, won the Derby Wednesday night at Newmarket. Air Force planes flew overhead, guarding the huge crowd below. It was difficult to tell whether the 161st Derby was an air show or a horse race.

The R.A.F. took no chances and put every kind of a plane into the air over the estimated 30,000—the biggest crowd to see a race in ancient Newmarket since the sport was started by King Charles.

Sports . . . Roundup

By KODIE BRIEF

NEW YORK, June 10.—(AP)—By this time all of you know that Billy Conn lost his chance to win the world heavyweight title by getting a little from Mr. Big in the 13th round last night. What some of you may not know is that the date for the new $100,000 gate will be some time in September at the Yankee Stadium. If anybody ever laid the scene for what the fight might be, it was here.

Here is the picture. Conn was leading with many blows in the seventh round of his time by four rounds going into the 13th. What happened here was a great deal of stalling, jabbing and boxing. Louie Lingo, who was the referee, stepped in and told Conn to stop. He refused to get in and slug. He got angry and hit Louie several times, and before you knew it, he was out. He was over for Conn except a run return in September when Mr. Mike Jacobs might win.

Unhappy get in the house was Louie. He was in line for a September title shot with either Louie or Conn, but things being the way they were, he had to postpone his chance for at least a year.

Waterloo Cup veteran boxing trainer who has been appointed in return to his home at Goshawke, has been given a new title. He is now the trainer of the new champion, Billy Conn.

Billie wanted right to win a right punch to the head. They traded and he took a few more. He was right hand meant, apparently ready to go. He took a few more. He was right hand meant, apparently ready to go. He took a few more. He was right hand meant, apparently ready to go.

The stretch where Owen Tudor, flying the stars of Mr. Macdonald, Margrave, outwitted by Margrave, Stams of Kalligard—carried the third of a great horse with the air cavalry, Owen Tudor, was the winner.

Here's the way it was but you've got to get the scene first. The track of several green grass is now very hot. The horses start over the green hill, where you can see one thing.

A brilliant sun beat down, highlighting the women's gay gowns and the men's smart suits. The grandstand is packed, the private stand bulging and the general stand overflowing with people with preparing masts. Across the track on the Downs about 15,000 who walked some 100 miles from London to Newmarket.

In a moment the 20 three-year-olds appeared. They were running straight at you—the uphill being the horse stretch in front of the grandstand.

Pounding, galloping, they came, while over the same grass hills, the horses appeared. They were running straight at you—the uphill being the horse stretch in front of the grandstand.

Out of the mob moved Owen Tudor, Margrave and Prince D. An 18-1 shot, the latter was coming off the best selling record made up for the time it was leading in the race.

Margrave, held at 10 to 1, made a desperate challenge but little Billy Tudor, who obtained army leave to ride, saw him and gave Owen Tudor the lead.

A little man with a sunburned face and a white shirt, was seen in the crowd. He was seen in the crowd. He was seen in the crowd. He was seen in the crowd. He was seen in the crowd.

 TORONTO, June 9.—(CP)—Mining stocks weakened sharply Thursday in the Toronto Exchange under comparatively light buying and selling. Trade in western mines was due to a few group price changes and a decline in the price of gold.

"All Out For Victory" To Be Slogan Of Canadian W.I.'s

Convention Pledges W. I.'s to work, Plan, Strive
For Victory During the Coming Years—Reports
Reveal Extensive Amount War Work Done

FREDERICTON, June 19.—(CP)—Canadian women from coast to coast, meeting in the Federated Women's Institutes' biennial convention, pledged themselves anew Wednesday to the Hamilton district, where the immigrants were adapting themselves quickly to agricultural life. In Alberta, however, Institutes were recommending legislation to prevent nessday to devote their efforts to the cause of victory. For the two years elapsing before the next convention, the delegates decided, the theme of the institutes will be "national defence" and their slogan will be "all out for victory."

Reports read to the assembly during the day underlined the war newcomers settling in colonies since this "prevents their adaption to Canadian conditions."

CHILD WELFARE WORK

Dr. Charlotte Whitton of Ottawa, director of the Canadian Family Welfare Council, urged that the women keep up their child welfare work.

$15,000 TO GOVERNMENT

By self-denial and by individual and community effort, the women had been enacted to make cash donations of more than $15,000 to the Dominion government. With this money was bought an ambulance, special physiotherapy equipment for students and a new school for an Alberta military hospital, recreational facilities at Camp

The institutes also had made cash donations of about $30,000 to the Canadian Red Cross society, turned over to the Red Cross and out supplies for the Red Cross and produced $14,000 worth of jam for overseas needs. Special Red Cross gifts included $3,500 for two ambulances, one each from Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia; $6,200 from Ontario for two field kitchens

For England, a $2,300 from Saskatchewan for Canadian Red Cross hospital beds in England.

REFUGEE WORK

Mrs. Fred McLaren of North River, P.E.I., told the Institutes of work in Canada, America, Germany

among the refugees from German-occupied countries. A Women's Institute had been formed among Sudeten (Czech-Slovakian) settlers in the Peace River bloc. Members of this group were eager to take the oath of allegiance and young men

For Ontario, she reported establishment of a Czech settlement in provincial governments in the Youth Training plan, which fit men and women for employment, advised Mrs. Leatherdale.

KAY ALLISON is left waiting at the airport when her brother-in-law, RABBIT FLYNN, Nevada mine owner, fails to come up. Kay had received word from JETTA DORNE, Barry's mine partner, that he would come with Flynn. But Barry would not show up. Kay's nervousness was soon in a state of panic. Barry, whom she still loves, had been absent for some time. She had been told that he was in the south, but she had no idea where. She had been told that he was in the south, but she had no idea where. She had been told that he was in the south, but she had no idea where.

"Yes, Miss Dorne," Kay answered, rather startled by the ungraciousness of the question. "Why—why, I don't know. At least until Barry comes."

"How long do you intend to remain?" Jetta Dorne asked Kay abruptly.

"Why—why, I don't know," Kay answered, rather startled by the ungraciousness of the question.

CHAPTER NINE
MELODY ushered Kay into a large room which, while it seemed to be a library, also served as a dining room when the large dining room was in use.

A large fireplace was placed in the center of the outside wall, and around it had been constructed a large room which, while it seemed to be a library, also served as a dining room when the large dining room was in use.

"Well, I guess if you gotta fly north you gotta fly north."

The Man I Want

By Rob Eden

KAY ALLISON was left waiting at the church when her bridegroom, BARRY TRAYN, Nevada mine man, failed to show up. Kay had received word from JETTA DORNE, Barry's mine partner, with whom he once was in love, telling her Barry couldn't come. Kay's parents have been in the mine business for years, but Kay never met Barry, whom she now loves. His valet, CHING, told Kay that BARRY GILBERT, who she had met at the mine, was the man who had been waiting for her at the church. She had seen him at the mine, where he had been waiting for her. She had seen him at the mine, where he had been waiting for her. She had seen him at the mine, where he had been waiting for her.

"You, Miss Dorne," Kay acknowledged, "I am indebted to you for your hospitality. I had no intention of intruding when I came here. I came to see Barry. He arrived yesterday."

"Not yet, but I am expecting him. When I don't know, as I've had no direct word. How long are you intended to remain?"

The vagueness of the question rather annoyed Kay. In the south, guests weren't asked how long they intended to stay, even if they were to stay a night or two. She was to stay a night or two. She was to stay a night or two. She was to stay a night or two.

"Why—why, I don't know. At least until Barry comes."

She never had dreamed of any such splendid surroundings as this. Of course, this was Jetta's home, not Barry's. He had told her that he had a small cottage, a little distance from the big house. She could imagine that he would be rather uncomfortable in such surroundings as these, as he had given no indication of being a millionaire or a diplomat. His taste ran to simple things, and she was willing to bet that his cottage was modest and operated in a friendly contrast to his message of Jetta Dorne.

Key thought it was slightly ridiculous, although she loved nice things and appreciated them. To maintain an establishment like this in such a remote mountain region. The expense must be tremendous, she marvelled at the labor involved in bringing all these treasures over the tortuous roads from the nearest railway line.

Several times during the meal, a servant brought a telephone to Jetta's place after having it into a well-oiled and Kay heard her giving various instructions, although her voice was so low she couldn't understand all that was said.

ATTRACTIVE While Jetta was talking, Kay had a good chance to appreciate her. Jetta was attractive, there was no getting around that—with her dark black hair and dark eyes. Her skin was olive with just a faint glow of color in her cheeks. She had a lovely figure. Kay talked the radiant personality.

"Pretty tough competition for a country girl," Kay mused to herself. "But I must be something, she hasn't, or Barry never would have been attracted to me. She certainly had her opportunity. She was with him right at hand for several years. Perhaps Barry prefers simplicity to sophistication. Maybe I've got a chance after all. At any rate, I'm not going to give up without a struggle."

Key was so engrossed with her own thoughts, that she didn't hear Dick Morrow the first time he spoke to her across the table, and he repeated his question.

"It must have been rather embarrassing, wasn't it, to get all ready for a wedding and then have the bridegroom turn up missing?"

Kay had disliked Morrow at first sight, but now she was certain that the never could be friendly with him. He was too suave, too self-assured, and there was a calculating look in his small eyes, half hidden behind his glasses, that made her decide that he was a man not to be trusted.

She flushed at his question and then quickly regained control of herself. If he were going to let him or Jetta bother her, she might as well give up right now, and go home as quickly as the wind.

"Somebody across which made it impossible for me to be there," she said. She wondered how Morrow seemed to know what had occurred in Memphis, and decided that attack was the best defence.

"You seem to be quite well informed about what happened," she remarked, with a smile. "Perhaps it's telepathy."

Morrow's pallid face turned a dull red, and Jetta, who had finished telephoning and had listened with amused interest to the exchange, laughed aloud.

"That's," Morrow started, and then seemed to lose control of his fork which slipped to the floor. A servant quickly brought a clean one from the service table and retrieved the one that had fallen.

Kay turned to Jetta.

"Have you had any word when Barry may come?"

"Haven't had a line from him since he left Memphis," Jetta answered, frankly, and Kay's heart leaped. If Barry hadn't wired Jetta or written to her, perhaps Ching had been returning to his mission in his sort of weather. Morrow put the sound of the downpour was like the beat of a drum.

With dinner over, Kay arose from her place to follow Jetta from the room.

"Dick and I have some business to go over tonight, if you'll excuse us," Jetta said. "You may make yourself at home any place in the house, except the library. We'll be working there."

"Thank you and thank you again for taking me in," Kay said.

"You know, I admire your spirit," the woman said. "It's too bad we can't ever be friends, but I'm afraid that's impossible."

"At least," Kay replied, "we can be friendly acquaintances."

Then she went to her room.

"How long do you intend to remain?" Jetta Dorne asked Kay abruptly.

A great fireplace was placed in the centre of the outside wall, and although it had been uncomfortably warm during the day, with the coming of the storm the blazing fire felt good as Kay sat in the room.

Plane Spotter May Eliminate Night Bombing

R. J. F. SANDERSON
WASHINGTON, June 18.—(AP)—Britain's radiolocator for spotting enemy planes may eliminate night bombing in a few months' time, Air Commodore George Pirie of the Royal Air Force said here Wednesday in announcing that the device had been turned over to the United States.

Calling for American volunteers to service the radiolocator in Britain and to perform other technical work there, Commodore Pirie air attaché at the British embassy said headquarters for a civilian technical corps in which American radio technicians and other skilled mechanics may enroll will be in New York. A transit centre will be established in Montreal where Lower Canada College has been rented for that purpose.

SPECTACULAR DEVELOPMENT

Commodore Pirie termed the radiolocator the most spectacular scientific development of the war.

It now is in mass production and is being manufactured faster than technicians can be trained to operate and repair it.

He said that possibilities as a mine detection apparatus and British officials are hopeful it will eliminate night bombing in a few months' time, perhaps a year. It is "not affected by fog or rain and keeps a 24-hour watch by means of electric waves it transmits."

Pirie shied away from all technical details of the radiolocator. He said, however, it spots an approach by "a series of compass bearings taken simultaneously from two points. Not only does it give the location of the plane but the direction it is flying and its speed can be determined accurately."

NIGHT FIGHTERS EQUIPPED

Night fighters are equipped with the radiolocator, Pirie said, and this probably is the reason for the relative success they have enjoyed in recent weeks against German bombers. Officials of the British air ministry gave the radiolocator much of the credit for winning the battle of Britain last fall.

Radiolocators in northern Ireland are used to spot German planes heading out to sea for raiding

It is confidently expected, Pirie indicated, that the state department will interpose no objection—under the Neutrality Act—to the American volunteers travel-

At one time Great Britain endeavored to institute outright recruiting for military service, he disclosed, but the state department said that was "quite impossible."

Many of the radiolocators are operated by women who have proved highly efficient.

In addition they are to be fed, lodged and clothed. Pensions are promised in case of disability, and death benefits to widows.

metal workers, machine tool setters and operators, wiremen and ships' electricians, sound engineers, automobile mechanics, ordnance and engine room artificers.

CANADIANS ENGAGED

Canada already has sent 1,000 radio technicians to Britain to work on the radiolocator and other detection devices and is training hundreds of others.

Although Montreal will be used as a transit centre for the civilian technical corps, where they will receive uniforms before proceeding overseas. the men will be trained in Britain. Later, although it is indefinite at the moment, they may be trained in Canada.

British Victory To Come After Critical Period

CAPE TOWN, Union of South Africa, June 19—(CP)—A prediction that the war will end in a British victory "perhaps next year, perhaps year after next" was voiced by Prime Minister Smuts in a university speech Wednesday.

"This year will be the most crucial and critical of the whole war," he said. "It will be a terrific task for us to maintain our defences and see that we are not overwhelmed by the forces which have been pre-Question: Mrs. F. O. writes: "I have developed 'housemaid's knee', and would be grateful if you would tell me

Answer: Housemaid's knee or bursitis is due to the inflammation of the sac or bursa which lies in front of the knee. Rest the limb, and use hot fomentations. See that the bowels are functioning, and if the case is a severe one, have diathermy treatment.
